Quote Of the Week

“
True peace is born of doing the will of God, and bearing with patience the sufferings of this life, and does not come from following one's own whim or selfish desire, for this always brings not peace and serenity, but disorder and discontent.
Bl. Pope John XXIII

Community of Friendship

If you were to approach any UD student and ask them for a word that best describes our university, "community" would be a frequent response; but "porches" would likely be a close second. And while there is a special place in our hearts for those appendages of student homes and for our ever important university website, there is another type of porch equally worth being excited about.

PORCH groups are small student led faith sharing communities through our Campus Ministry program. There are PORCH groups for everything under the sun—retreats, BreakOuts, first-year students, varying interests—the list goes on. As both a PORCH leader for the Lighthouse retreat and a participant in the New Orleans BreakOut group, I am greatly looking forward to another year of involvement in this program.

The activities done in PORCH group are as diverse as the groups themselves. Prayer in many different and ever creative forms is an integral part of the growth sought by these communities, and honest, real, interesting discussions are typically on the agenda. Groups have been known to do service together, go hiking and eat meals as a community.

One of my personal favorite parts of PORCH is the opportunity to create relationships built upon a common ground. By entering into a community of friendship where we are both accepted and challenged, we can find joy and growth, laughter and perspective.

So if you are entering the new year searching for a way to combine our two favorite words, consider finding that UD community in a powerful and beautiful way by looking into PORCH. Feel free to contact Theresa Rotuno, senior student, PORCH leader or Mike Bennett, Campus Minister for Retreats and Faith Communities.
