

COVID-19 pandemic in the United States

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

The COVID-19 pandemic in the United States is part of the worldwide pandemic of coronavirus disease 2019 (COVID-19). As of September 2020, there were over 6,600,000 cases of COVID-19 in the U.S. [6]

On December 15, 1918, the first American case of the 1918 flu pandemic, also known as the 1918 influenza pandemic, was reported in the United States. The pandemic was caused by the H1N1 influenza A virus. The death toll is estimated to be between 50 million and 100 million people worldwide.

On March 13, 1918, President Woodrow Wilson signed the Espionage Act, which made it a crime to disclose national defense information to the enemy.

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

Lessons learned from the 1918 Spanish flu pandemic include the importance of early detection and rapid response, the need for effective communication, and the value of international cooperation.

The 1918 Spanish flu pandemic was one of the deadliest pandemics in human history, with an estimated 50 million to 100 million deaths worldwide.

The 1918 Spanish flu was the first of two pandemics caused by H1N1 influenza A virus. It was an unusually deadly influenza pandemic, with a mortality rate of 2% to 5% in adults.

