The two versions, A and B, may be used independently or in combination.

When used in the latter way, the following is a good arrangement, and may suggest others equally good:

Sing the first stanza as a unison chorus, (A), with treble voices, or men's voices, or both, using the score of the mixed voices as accompaniment.

Follow this by the second stanza in the version for men's voices, (B), without accompaniment, keeping the second tenor a little prominent.
