This volume is the result of tremendous dedication and the ongoing belief in the need to provide a publication outlet for research and information dedicated solely to the basic communication course. Many people have contributed their time, energy and talents to this volume. I first want to recognize the excellent work provided by the Editorial Board who worked to meet my deadlines and provide useful feedback to the authors to help them revise and/or resubmit their research. Without excellent cooperation from each of the reviewers, the second Basic Course Annual would not be complete.

I would be remiss in not thanking Malcolm Fox and American Press for their continued willingness to support the Basic Course Annual. Their willingness to continue their support and publish this edition has hopefully formed the foundation for a long relationship and many years of publishing the Basic Course Annual.

Finally I want to thank the Basic Course Committee of the Speech Communication Association for their commitment to the Basic Course Annual. There are too many people in the Basic Course Committee to list individually; but I want to let them know that their support is appreciated.

Finally, it was after the original Annual went into press that we found out that Norm Watson had passed away. Those who knew him wanted to develop an appropriate tribute for Norm and his work for the basic courses across the country. Our tribute to Norm is this and future volumes of the Annual. I know that Norm is looking at the publication of the second Annual and is smiling at us; because he was instrumental in soliciting support for this project.

I hope each of you enjoys this volume as much as the readers of the initial volume enjoyed reading it.
