University of Dayton's upper classmen are seeing to it that the incoming freshman class -- an anticipated 1,200 strong -- is warmly welcomed onto the campus.

The next several days have been set aside as Freshman Orientation Week, designed to introduce the new students to the university and to the campus before classes get under way Monday.

The program is under the direction of Juniors Larry Roderer of Dayton and Al Wunsch of Rocky River. A number of upper classmen are busy this week interviewing the freshmen and introducing them to various organizations on the campus.

Wednesday night, the class will be welcomed by the Very Rev. Andrew L. Seebold, S.M., U.D. president, in a program at the fieldhouse.

On Thursday, a sports night will be held, also in the fieldhouse, in which the class will be "briefed" on the U.D. athletic program. The Flyerettes are slated to perform during the evening.

The Junior Class will sponsor a get-acquainted party for the freshmen and other new students Friday night and an innovation on the campus -- a dance on the tennis courts adjacent to Founders' Hall -- will be held Saturday night.

Freshmen will complete registration Friday. The 1,200 anticipated will form the largest freshman class in U.D. history.
