"Red Feather Day" among University of Dayton students netted $1,000 for the Community Chest campaign, student leaders on the campus announced Friday.

A total of $971.00 and a bag of uncounted pennies weighing about 15 pounds were collected at the Red Feather student assembly by UD's Flyerettes. The student council and individual classes will add enough from their treasuries to make the collection an even $1,000.

No goal had been set for the student giving and there was considerable joy on the campus when the total was announced.

"The students really came through," said Dave King, president of the student council, and Joan Leff, president of the Flyerettes. "And they did it on the eve of a big dance and football game and soon after paying their tuition and buying books."

Very Rev. Andrew L. Seebold, S.J., UD president, complimented the students and stated that "the student body, realizing they are a part of this community, have demonstrated real community spirit with this excellent showing. We are certainly proud of them."

The Red Feather rally, held at the first student assembly of the year, featured the appearance of Francis P. Locke, chairman, and William F. Smith, associate chairman of the public-civic division of the chest campaign. Mr. Locke started the collection with a personal donation of five dollars. The Flyerettes, who themselves gave $15 as an organization, carried on from there.

Next week public, parochial, county, Kettering and Oakwood schools will be asked to join in the Red Feather drive.
