ISE Summer CoRPs (Collaborative Research Projects) provides an opportunity for University of Dayton students to conduct full-time summer research in the natural sciences, engineering and mathematics on campus. Students choose among projects led by two or three faculty co-mentors from different disciplines, with the team jointly researching a relevant challenge in STEM fields. The collaborative nature and co-mentorship model of the projects prepare students for future success by providing hands-on opportunities to work in multiple disciplines, to acquire broader perspectives on addressing research challenges, and to practice working as part of diverse teams toward a shared goal. Fellows also benefit from weekly cohort programming that includes professional development activities and social events.

Participating Summer CoRPs students will receive a $5,000 fellowship award. University housing will be provided to interested awardees. Students identifying as a person from underrepresented minorities in STEM fields or with FAFSA-identified financial need are encouraged to apply.
