Doing Something New

"Look I am doing something new," says God in the passage from Isaiah this morning. As we celebrate the feast of St. Patrick, we call to mind the new things God did through him. St. Patrick, a childhood slave who found freedom in Christ, grew up to be a great evangelizer. He was known for his missionary zeal, for his ability to see the destructive elements of the culture around him, to challenge that culture, and to bring Christ to people's lives. Patrick, who knew what it was to be physically enslaved, recognized that there are many ways to be enslaved. There are many ways that our own enslavements to destructive habits and ways of life chain us and keep us from fully experiencing freedom in Christ. Patrick was unafraid to proclaim the Gospel. "Look," God seemed to say, "I am doing something new in this land through Patrick."

Patrick's way of evangelization was also to recognize that there are many good and healthy things in the culture of his day. He saw what was healthy, what brought freedom, what in the culture facilitated praising God, what in the community was worth celebrating, and what of the old culture could be part of a new fully Christian culture. He met people where they were and used what they knew to introduce them to the Gospel. Like Jesus in today's Gospel, Patrick invited people to reflect on their shortcomings and sinfulness and then personally and lovingly challenged them to "go and sin no more."

This St Patrick's Day, as we celebrate the life of a great evangelizer, let us ask ourselves: What harmful ways of being do I need to be freed from? What freedom is Christ inviting me to? What new thing does God want to do in my life? What new thing in the world does God want to do through me? In what ways is Christ inviting me to "go and sin no more?"
