Author Identification
Author Identification

Howard W. Cotrell (M.S., Purdue University) is Associate Professor and Assistant Director for Instructional Development in Instructional Media Services at Bowling Green. In this capacity, he offers assistance, guidance and support to other faculty at Bowling Green. With Richard L. Weaver II, he has written more than thirty-five articles in the areas of instructional development and instructional communication.

Mary M. Gill is an Associate Professor at Buena Vista College.

Diane Atkinson Gorcyca (Ph.D., University of Oklahoma) is Assistant Professor at Missouri Western State College in St. Joseph, Missouri. She was basic course director at Iowa State University and Northwest Missouri State University prior to her current position. She also spent several years in high school teaching. Her major teaching and research interests are male/female communication styles and strategies, relationship development and public relations.

Michael R. Hemphill (Ph.D., University of Iowa) is Associate Professor and Chair, Speech Communication Department at the University of Arkansas at Little Rock. He introduced computer-assisted instruction to the department in 1984 and has published research both regionally and nationally in the area of computer-assisted instruction and speech education. He is currently implementing a state-of-the-art in-

Volume 4, June 1992

Published by eCommons, 1992
Interactive video computer lab for use in the basic communication course.

Jon Hess (M.A., Ohio University) is enrolled in the doctoral program in Speech Communication at the University of Minnesota in Minneapolis. His research interests include interpersonal communication and communication education.

Judyth A. Isserlis (Ed.D., Columbia University) is an Associate Professor in the Department of Speech Communication Studies, Iona College, New Rochelle, New York.

Michael Leff is Professor of Communication Studies and Director of the Public Speaking Basic Course at Northwestern University, Evanston, Illinois.

Charles Lubbers (M.A., South Dakota State University) is currently a Doctoral Candidate in Speech Communication at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln. While his current teaching and research emphases are public relations and business and professional communication, he has taught the basic communication at four different institutions. The methods of instruction have included the traditional class setting, the PSI method and the ass lecture format. His dissertation research focuses on the influence of several variables on student success in and attitudes toward, the basic communication course taught using the PSI format. The investigation included in this volume is not part of the dissertation research.

Craig A. Newburger (Ph.D., Purdue University) is an Associate Professor at the University of Arkansas at Little Rock. He is presently completing Critical Decision-Making and Approaches to Systematic Problem-Solving: Perspectives on Small Group Interaction for William C. Brown, Publishers. His research interests include consideration of the impact of video-modeling and video feedback on pre- and post- public speaking performance apprehension. He has served as an Associate Editor for the Basic Communication Course Annual, Secretary of the Speech Communication Association Basic Course Committee, Chair of the Central States Communication Association Education Interest Group, and Past President and Journal Editor for the Oklahoma Speech Communication Association.

Judy C. Pearson (Ph.D., Indiana University) is Professor, Director of Graduate Studies and Research, School of Interpersonal Communication, Ohio University. She has written basic communication course textbooks and published articles on the basic course.

Warren Sandmann is a doctoral candidate, emphasizing Rhetorical Studies, in the Department of Communication Studies at the University of Iowa. A version of this paper was presented during the 1991 Speech Communication Association convention in Atlanta, Georgia.

Lauren A. Vicker (Ph.D., University of Pittsburgh) is an Associate Professor in the Communication/Journalism Department at St. John Fisher College in Rochester, New York. Before coming to St. John Fisher, Dr. Vicker taught at Syracuse University, St. Cloud University and the University of Pittsburgh. Her areas of teaching responsibility include public speaking, interviewing, group discussion, speech communication, and mass communication theory. Dr. Vicker is also an Adjunct Professor in the William E. Simon Graduate School of Business Administration at the University of Rochester.

William J. Wardrope is a Doctoral Student in the Department of Speech Communication at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.
Author Identification

Richard L. Weaver II (Ph.D., Indiana University) is Professor of Interpersonal and Public Communication at Bowling Green State University. He is Director of the Basic Communication course at Bowling Green that enrolls more than 1,000 students each semester. His publications include more than 25 books (including all editions) and over 100 articles in print. Also, six of his speeches have been published in Vital Speeches of the Day. His research interests are in interpersonal communication, leadership, communication education, and instructional communication.

Valerie A. Whitecap (Ph.D. University of Pittsburgh) is Assistant Professor at Westminster College in Pennsylvania. She has taught Theatre, English and Communication on the middle school, high school and college levels for twenty years.

Andrew D. Wolvin (Ph.D., Purdue University) is Professor and Chair of the Department of Speech Communication at the University of Maryland-College Park. While at the University of Maryland, he has been Director of the Basic Course. He has co-authored book chapters and articles on the basic course and is co-author of Communicating: A Social and Career Focus.

Wendy S. Zabava Ford (M.A., University of Maryland) is a Doctoral Candidate in Speech Communication at the University of Maryland. She has taught a variety of introductory courses in speech communication and served as a Basic Course Director. Her major research interests are organizational communication and communication training.