God's Love Prevails in the End

I am always touched by the story of Peter in the readings during Holy Week. A man so faithful and yet so broken. When the cock crows and he realizes he has done the very thing he swore he wouldn't do, my heart breaks a little, not because he fails but because the way he falls short. It is so similar to the way I fall short; the way we all turn away from love, truth and beauty every day.

I am also struck by Jesus's compassion for Peter. He does not define Peter, or us, by sin and brokenness. No matter our mistakes or when we have turned away from God and denied our own faith, we are still worthy of love, belonging and eternal hope. Knowing our mistakes even before we do, God accepts and loves us for who we are. Jesus stoops to wash our dirty feet knowing we cannot possibly return the favor.

As we hear the stories of Peter and Judas and even Jesus himself crying out in agony, let us remember that neither our pain and suffering, nor sin and brokenness are the end of the story. God loves us for who we are and love prevails in the end. Light comes out of darkness. Death and sin do not have the last word.

As the lights come on and the Alleluias are sung, I pray we all allow ourselves to surrender to God's abundant love and the eternal hope of the Resurrection.
