Quote Of the Week

“

God is more concerned with the direction of your life than with its speed.

Marie T. Freeman

Leaving a Part of Myself in Cameroon

When I went to Cameroon on a summer immersion through the Center for Social Concern, it was an experience unlike anything I had ever done in my life. I felt like I was at home, and I grew so much as a person while I was there. During my stay we were stationed in Kumba. The people there are genuinely good people. It is impossible not to see God in the lives and culture of the people in Cameroon. They live selflessly and give abundantly even when they do not have it. There were so many times when people paid for my cab or bought me food just to show that I was important to them.

One of the people I met there was a ward maid at the hospital where I worked. Her name was Joyce, but I called her Mami. We became very close over the course of my trip and we even still talk to this day. She gave me the honor of naming her baby girl that she was pregnant with during my stay. I named the little girl after me. Mami Joyce told me that there would always be a part of me in Cameroon. The experiences and memories like this one made me realize how to care for others and take care of people the way that Christ calls us to. I loved my time there and I cannot wait to go back!

SOA Vigil Info Nights:

September 23, and 30, 8-9pm, ArtStreet Studio C

The School of the Americas (now called WHINSEC) is a military school in the U.S. that trains Latin American soldiers. SOA graduates have gone on to commit acts of injustice and violence in their own communities, such as the assassination of Archbishop Oscar Romero. Every year there is a gathering to protest and pray for the closing of the school, as well as to remember and honor its victims. Come to one of our information nights to learn more.

Hunger Cup WSU vs UD

September 13-30

A Battle Royale to determine which school can donate the most canned goods for families in need is happening! UD Hunger Cup barrels have been dropped off at these locations: Day Air Credit Union, Health and Sports Sciences (Fitz Hall), The Fitz Center, Center for Social Concern, Lifelong Learning Institute, Student Employment Engineering Department and the McGinnis Center. UD is known for our generosity – this is a way to show it and WIN against WSU! GO FLYERS!!!
