Answering 'How Are You?' During Holy Week

Have you ever heard yourself respond to someone's query of 'how are you?' with the word 'busy?' I've caught myself doing this far too often of late, which has led to some much needed Lenten reflection...especially in the midst of Holy Week- the penultimate week of my Christian faith!

One of the things (and indeed there are many!) that draws me into the beauty of the Triduum observance is the pace and rhythm from Thursday evening until Easter Sunday midday. During this time, we are invited to intentionally journey with Christ from the Last Supper, through his death at Golgotha, to his resurrection and the stone being pushed away on Easter Sunday. For us at UD, we are particularly blessed to have time away from work, classes, and our everyday routines to enter into this journey with our Savior.

Thanks to this break, I hope that we as a faith community are able to depart from the response of 'busy,' or 'tired,' that can so easily serve as a response to the question posed above and instead respond honestly and authentically as we walk with Christ through Holy Week. How Am I? I'm overwhelmed that someone would die for me but would leave a ritual, the Eucharist, for me to remember him by- I'm saddened and disgusted by the way in which Christ died for me- I'm overjoyed at my Savior's victory over sin and death!
