1996

Author Information

Follow this and additional works at: http://ecommons.udayton.edu/bcca

Part of the Higher Education Commons, Interpersonal and Small Group Communication Commons, Mass Communication Commons, Other Communication Commons, and the Speech and Rhetorical Studies Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: http://ecommons.udayton.edu/bcca/vol8/iss1/17

This Back Matter is brought to you for free and open access by the Department of Communication at eCommons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Basic Communication Course Annual by an authorized editor of eCommons. For more information, please contact frice1@udayton.edu, mshlangen1@udayton.edu.
Author Identification

Nancy Rost Goulden (Ed.D., Northern Arizona University, 1989) is Assistant Professor of Speech and Coordinator of the Basic Public Speaking Course at Kansas State University. She has co-authored a public speaking text and co-authored the Instructor's Resource Manual for Verderber's Challenge of Effective Speaking, (9th Ed.). Her research interests include assessment of communication products and performances, teacher-student communication about grading, and the history of school rhetoric.

Charlene J. Handford (Ph.D., Louisiana State University in Baton Rouge, 1979) is Professor of Communication at Louisiana State University in Shreveport where she has served as coordinator of the basic course and interim chair of the Department of Communications. She has published articles in Communication Education and the Mississippi Journal of History and two chapters in Teaching and Directing the Basic Communications Course, edited by Lawrence W. Hugenberg, Pamela L. Gray, and Douglas M. Trank.

Mark Hickson, III (Ph.D., Southern Illinois University, 1971) is Professor in and the Chair of the Department of Communication Studies and Co-Director of the National Institute for Media Citizenship at the University of Alabama at Birmingham. His research interests include nonverbal communication, communication theory, and communication education.
J.S. Hinton (M.F.A., University of Southern Mississippi, 1975) is a doctoral candidate at the University of Missouri — Columbia and is currently on faculty in the Department of Communication at Mississippi State University. Her research interests include interpersonal communication, social support, family communication, and rituals and stories.

Connie M. Honken (M.S., Northwest Missouri State University, 1989) is an instructor of Speech Communication and Communication Disorders at Northwest Missouri State University. She also tutors intercultural students in language and dialect improvement. Her research interest include special education, communication disorders, and intercultural communication.

Lawrence W. Hugenberg (Ph.D., Ohio State University, 1981) is Professor of Communication and Director of Basic Courses at Youngstown State University. He co-authored two texts for basic communication courses, a simulation for the business and professional speaking course, and was a co-editor of a resource for the basic course, Teaching and Directing the Basic Communication Course. He is the former chair of the Basic Course Commission of the Speech Communication Association and the Basic Course Committee of the Central States Communication Association. His research interests include basic communication course pedagogy, communication competence, communication assessment and cultural diversity.

Christine M. Kelly (Ph.D., Purdue University, 1991) is an Assistant Professor of Communication at Otterbein College. Her research interests include political communication, rhetorical theory, and rhetorical criticism. Her most recent research examined the illegal immigrant issue in the 1994 California Governor's election. She recently finished editing a book entitled, Diversity in Public Communication: A Reader.
Michael W. Kramer (Ph.D., Texas, 1991) has been the director of the basic course at the University of Missouri — Columbia from 1993-96. In addition to educational issues, his teaching and research interests include organizational assimilation, group decision-making, and emotions in the workplace.

Aimée Langlois (Ed.D., Columbia University, 1975) is Professor of Child Development at Humboldt State University. She is also a licensed speech-language pathologist and, in that capacity, she consults with the Office of Disabled Student Services at the university for the benefit of students with communication disorders. For many years she taught graduate and undergraduate courses on the problem of stuttering and she published articles on the topic. More recently she has conducted seminars for teachers on the problems that students who stutter face in the classroom.

Robert Littlefield (Ph.D., University of Minnesota, 1983) is Professor of Communication at the University of North Dakota. He has served as the Director of the Institute for the Study of Cultural Diversity. He co-authored a workbook for the basic course at North Dakota State University and was instrumental in introducing diversity-related speeches and activities into the curriculum. His specialty areas include communication education, intercultural communication and managing a diverse workforce.

Bayo Oludaja (Ph.D., The University of Kansas, 1992) is Assistant Professor of Speech Communication at Northwest Missouri State University. He published an essay on principles and theories of persuasion and another manuscript on experiential approaches to intercultural communication. His research interests include language usage and listening in intercultural/international communication, nonverbal communication, and religious communication.
Kimberly A. Powell (Ph.D., The University of Georgia, 1992) is Assistant Professor of Communication/Linguistics and Director of Forensics at Luther College. She authored an article on using debate to teach persuasion in the basic course in. Other publications include studies of social movements and an anthology on Women Public Speakers in the United States, 1925-1993. Her research interests include social movement and feminist rhetoric.

Deanna D. Sellnow (Ph.D., University of North Dakota, 1991) is Assistant Professor of Communication and Director of the Public Speaking Fundamental Program at North Dakota State University. She is currently serving as the Vice-Chair and Program Planner for the Basic Communication Course Committee of the Central States Communication Association. She is editor of a workbook for the basic course at the University of North Dakota entitled, The Practice of Public Speaking, (3rd Ed.). She developed and teaches two courses in GTA training. Once course focuses on helping GTAs teach public speaking and principles and theories of communication. The other course, "Introduction to College Teaching in the Humanities and Social Sciences," is open to GTAs throughout the University. She is also serving on a university committee to design a college teaching minor for graduate students. Her research interests include pedagogy in the basic communication course, communication education, gender communication, and rhetorical criticism of music as communication.

Shawn Spano (Ph.D., Indiana University, 1988) is an Associate Professor of Communication Studies at San Jose State University. His research interests include communication theory, interpersonal communication, social constructionism, and language pragmatics. He is the author of numerous journal articles and convention papers, and has recently written in the area of student outcomes assessment.
Bryan B. Whaley (Ph.D., Purdue University, 1991) is Assistant Professor of Communication at the University of San Francisco. In addition to investigating strategies of interaction with those with communicative disorders, his research includes language and social influence, and communication and health. He serves as Chairperson of USF’s Disability Related Services Committee.

Glen Williams (Ph.D., Indiana University, 1993) is a visiting assistant professor of speech communication at Texas A&M University and is director of the basic course. He has published work pertaining to pedagogy, TA training and development, and directorship of the basic course. Glen also has published work that explores rhetoric during the American Revolution.

Jennifer Wood (M.A., University of Pittsburgh) is a doctoral candidate in the Department of Communication at the University of Pittsburgh. In 1990, she received the International Communication Association’s award for Excellent Teaching by a Graduate Student. Her research interests include gender and communication, legal discourse, and engaged pedagogy.