Each summer fourteen UD students are gifted with the opportunity to live and work within a culture in the United States that is very different from the one in which they live. UD students will spend nine weeks this summer living in community and doing service as members of the University of Dayton Summer Appalachia Program (UDSAP) in Salyersville, Kentucky.

The UDSAP program comes out of the University of Dayton's Catholic and Marianist heritage. It is a heritage of building a strong faith, living in community and doing service.

The following activities are part of the program: Day Camp for kids, a program for teens and visiting a nursing home. UD Students will also take time to visit with the families of the teens and children who take part in the programs. The hope is to build good and lasting relationships with the people in Appalachia and continue these relationships by visiting during the school year.

The UD students also live a simple life in a faith community setting. They share things in common and have prayer and meals together. In living simply they recycle and reuse things, being respectful of nature and the environment.

Students interested in this service program have to be open and want to learn from the people in Appalachia and from their Appalachian culture.

Interested? Pick up an UDSAP folder from the Center for Social Concern in Liberty Hall, Room 107. Applications are due January 19, 2011.
