It's insanely upsetting how many women feel they are not good enough.

I think this is because we are told by American culture that we must constantly be two things at once: thin and curvy, smart but not too smart, sexually experienced and 'pure', Christian but not a 'Holy Roller.' It's no wonder we often feel completely burnt out physically, mentally, emotionally and spiritually. It's no wonder we feel like we're not enough – we're trying to be 2 completely different things at once! AND those things are rooted in pleasing others and attempting to create an identity that's contrary to who we truly are.

Girls 4 God (G4G) is a female faith-sharing group on campus. In the words of Jess De Groot, G4G is "an incredible community of women who support each other and inspire each other to think more deeply about their faith and relationship with God." G4G is a place where you are safe to discover God and yourself, to heal from past pains, and to make some soul-friends.

At G4G we believe in rooting our identities in God, because what's more beautiful than something created in God's image? No human-made standard could EVER live up to the beauty that YOU have. Why? Because you're a daughter of God. How could your faith and life be different if you really believed and took that fact to heart?
