DAYTON, O - The new 1958 Tax Act is a grab-bag with something to offer everyone.

That's the opinion of a noted federal tax authority, Paul Seghers of New York, who will be in Dayton this weekend (Oct. 30 - Nov. 1) to conduct a session at the University of Dayton's fourth annual Institute on Federal Taxation.

Seghers, who is chairman of the international section of the New York Board of Trade, will discuss this new tax law and some other changes in the tax picture which have taken place during the past year. This discussion, on Thursday morning (Oct. 30) will get the Institute under way. It will close at noon Saturday.

While most people feel the 1958 Tax Act is predominantly designed to help small business, there are a lot of other facets to it which open up wide areas to many interests, the former editor of Prentice-Hall's Tax Service said.

Seghers is one of 15 attorneys, CPAs and educators taking part in the Institute.

U.D. officials said registrations for the three-day Institute will be taken at the door Thursday in the Empire Ballroom at Hotel Miami, where all sessions will be conducted.
