Author Information

Follow this and additional works at: http://ecommons.udayton.edu/bcca

Part of the Higher Education Commons, Interpersonal and Small Group Communication Commons, Mass Communication Commons, Other Communication Commons, and the Speech and Rhetorical Studies Commons

Recommended Citation

Available at: http://ecommons.udayton.edu/bcca/vol16/iss1/19
Author Identifications

M. Tanya Brann-Barrett is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Communication at the University College of Cape Breton in Nova Scotia, Canada. For eight years she was coordinator of the basic communication courses’ experiential learning lab. She currently teaches communication basic courses, and facilitation courses that service, among others, communication lab peer facilitators. Her research interests include experiential learning practices, holistic teaching and learning, and feminist issues in communication education.

John R. Baldwin, Associate Professor at Illinois State University (Ph.D., Arizona State University, 1994) researches intercultural and intergroup communication. He teaches courses in qualitative research methods and communication theory. He has published chapters in different intercultural readers and recent articles in The Southern Journal of Communication, the International Journal of Intercultural Relations, and Human Communication Research. He is currently working on a book that content analyzes definitions of culture.

Matthew H. Barton (Ph.D., University of Nebraska-Lincoln, 2001) is an assistant professor at the Southern Utah University. While at the University of Nebraska, Lincoln and has taught and worked with students in the basic course for a number of years. Most recently Matt was in charge of curriculum as the assistant and associate director of the Business and Professional Communication course at the University of Nebraska, Lincoln where he trained instructor assistants to work with graduate students in the evaluation of their peers in the basic course. Although Matt’s primary area of research is rhetorical criticism with a focus on presidential discourse, religion and popular culture, issues of teaching pedagogy like the use of IAs in the basic course are central to his efforts as a teacher and a scholar.

Mark Comadena (Ph.D., Purdue University) is a professor of communication at Illinois State University where he serves as graduate program coordinator. His research interests center on interpersonal and nonverbal communication processes in the classroom.

Craig W. Cutbirth (Ph.D. Bowling Green State University) is an associate professor in the Department of Communication at Illinois State University. He has directed a basic communication course in the past, but is primarily interested in social conflict and political communication. His current research interests include exploring the potential of the internet in social controversy.

Chad Edwards (Ph.D., University of Kansas) is a visiting professor of Communication at Marietta College. His primary research interests are in instructional communication and education studies. His work has been published in such journals as Communication Education, Communication Research Reports, Journal on Excellence in College Teaching and Academic Exchange Quarterly. Currently, his research focuses on educational metaphysics as they relate to communication in teaching/learning encounters.
Lynn M. Harter (Ph.D., University of Nebraska, 2000) is an assistant professor in the School of Interpersonal Communication at Ohio University. Co-author of two books, she has published 15 journal articles and invited book chapters. Her research and teaching interests focus on the discourses of health and healing and organizing processes. She serves on the editorial boards of Communication Studies and the Journal of Public Affairs.

Katherine L. Hatfield (M.A., Central Michigan University) is a doctoral student in the School of Communication Studies at Ohio University. Her research interests include rhetorical studies and communication theory as they relate to issues of public and private spheres and interpersonal communication in the context of family and health.

Stephen K. Hunt (Ph.D., Southern Illinois University) is an Assistant Professor and Co-Director of the basic communication course at Illinois State University. His research interests include the communication needs of students at-risk, students’ learning/cognitive styles, training graduate students, and assessment.

Adam C. Jones (M.S., Illinois State University, 2002) is a doctoral student and the Associate Director of the basic communication course at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln. His research interests instructional and interpersonal communication.

Erika L. Kirby (Ph.D., University of Nebraska, 2000) is an assistant professor in the Department of Communication Studies at Creighton University. Her teaching and research interests include organizational, applied and work-family communication as well as their intersections with gender. She has published articles in outlets such as the Journal of Applied Communication Research, Management Communication Quarterly and Communication Yearbook, and serves on the editorial boards of the Journal of Applied Communication Research, Communication Studies and Communication Teacher.

Karla N. Kuhlman (B.S., Ohio University) is a master's student in the School of Communication Studies at Ohio University. Her research interests include health communication and interpersonal communication as they relate to issues of social support and family.

Margaret R. LaWare (Ph.D., Northwestern University) is an Assistant Professor of English and Speech Communication at Iowa State University. She is Associate Director of the Basic Course which serves more than 1,300 students annually. She also teaches courses in Business and Professional Communication and Gender and Communication and is an affiliate of the Women's Studies Program. She has published in Argumentation and Advocacy and Women and Language and has essays in several collected volumes including an article on the Vietnam Veterans Memorial and a feminist critical biography of Mary Daly.

Daniel P. Modaff (PhD, University of Texas at Austin, 1995) is an Associate Professor in the School of Communication Studies at Ohio University. He has published in the fields of instructional communication and language and social interaction, and is the co-author of a 2002 textbook in organizational communication. Currently, he is conducting an investigation of Sioux life prior to European contact in an attempt to inform contemporary organizational communication philosophies and practices.

Laura C. Prividera (Ph.D., Bowling Green State University, 2002) is an Assistant Professor at East Carolina University. Her main areas of interest include interpersonal, organizational, and instructional communication. Her dissertation research focused on the enhancement of gender and cultural sensitivity in communication classrooms by way of basic communication courses. The general goal of her research is to give voice to those who are marginalized in society. She has presented numerous papers at international, national, and regional conferences.

William K. Rawlins (Ph.D., Temple University) is Stocker Professor of Communication Studies at Ohio University. In addition to the basic communication course, he has taught courses in interpersonal communication, communication in public and private relationships, dialogue and experience, interpretive and ethnographic inquiry, communication and narrative, Gregory Bateson and communication theory, and communication in friendships across the life course. He received the School of Liberal Arts Educational Excellence Award for 2002-2003 at Purdue University.

Dana L. Reynolds (M.A., Illinois State University) works for the Professional Development Institute at Illinois Central College.

Judith A. Rolls (Ph.D. Indiana University) is a professor in the Department of Communication at the Univer-

et al.: Author Information
Cheri J. Simonds (Ph.D., University of Oklahoma) is an Associate Professor and Co-Director of the Basic Course in Communication at Illinois State University. She has co-authored a book on classroom communication and has published articles on teacher clarity and challenge behavior in the college classroom. Her major research interests include graduate student training and development, evaluation issues, and assessment.
Jo Sprague (Ph.D. Purdue University) is a Professor of Communication Studies at San Jose State University and the Associate Director of the Center for Faculty Development and Support. Her co-authored text The Speaker's Handbook is in its sixth edition. Other scholarship has centered on issues related to TA Development and in various efforts to bring a critical perspective to both communication education and instructional communication.

Kristen Treinen (Ph.D., Southern Illinois University) is an Assistant Professor and Basic Course Director/Director of Teaching Assistants at Minnesota State University, Mankato. Kristen Treinen’s area of research interest include graduate teaching assistant training and development, the basic communication course, communication pedagogy with an emphasis on antiracist pedagogy and critical pedagogy.

Paul D. Turman (Ph.D., University of Nebraska-Lincoln, 2000) is an assistant professor at the University of Northern Iowa. While at the University of Nebraska, Lincoln, Paul was the assistant and associate director of the Business and Professional Communication Course. He was in charge of curriculum development and the training of graduate students and instructor assistants used in the course. Paul’s area of research focuses on a combination of interpersonal communication, instructional communication, and instructional training.