DAYTON, O. Nov. --Some 200 high school seniors who may one day be teaching in area school systems are expected at the University of Dayton Saturday (Nov. 14).

The occasion is the seventh annual Teacher Career Conference. Attending will be seniors from high schools within a 50-mile radius of Dayton, looking for an "inside view" of the profession they may choose.

Brother George Nagel, former dean of business administration at the University and now chairman of the Student Aid Committee, will be principal speaker at the gathering. He'll tell the prospective teachers of the financial aids available for their education through provisions of the National Defense Education Act. Students who go into teaching are given many advantages in this law.

Discussion groups will tackle such topics as the discipline problem of today's schools, the requirements of a good teacher, the scholastic preparation of teachers, and the teacher's role in character formation.

After the all-morning session in the fieldhouse, the visiting high schoolers will be treated to seats at the UD-Miami football game in the stadium.

The conference is sponsored by the student education association. Patricia Gifford of Xenia is chairman.
