

Oct 2nd, 11:30 AM - 1:00 PM

Partnering with Faith Communities: Challenges of Religious and Secular Literacy

Rob Brodrick

Independent Scholar, Rjbrodrick@gmail.com

Kelly S. Johnson

University of Dayton, kjohnson2@udayton.edu

Anwar Khan

Islamic Relief USA

Leocadie Lushombo

Boston College

Edith Tapia

Hope Border Institute

Follow this and additional works at: https://ecommons.udayton.edu/human_rights

Part of the Religious Thought, Theology and Philosophy of Religion Commons

Brodrick, Rob; Johnson, Kelly S.; Khan, Anwar; Lushombo, Leocadie; and Tapia, Edith, "Partnering with Faith Communities: Challenges of Religious and Secular Literacy" (2019). Conference: The Social Practice of Human Rights. 17.

https://ecommons.udayton.edu/human_rights/2019/events/17

This Event is brought to you for free and open access by the Human Rights Center at eCommons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Conference: The Social Practice of Human Rights by an authorized administrator of eCommons. For more information, please contact frice1@udayton.edu, mschlange1@udayton.edu.

Going Against the Grain

University of Dayton Human Rights Center
Social Practice of Human Rights Conference, Oct. 1-4, 2019

Partnering with Faith Communities: Challenges of Religious and Secular Literacy

Presented by:

Rob Brodrick, Independent Scholar
Kelly S. Johnson, University of Dayton
Anwar Khan, Islamic Relief USA
Leocadie Lushombo, Boston College
Edith Tapia, Hope Border Institute

Session: Challenges of Religious and Secular Literacy

Abstract:

Partnering with Faith Communities: Challenges of Religious and Secular Literacy

While many scholars have noted the necessity of a grasp of the complexity of religious belief for engagement in international relations, human rights, and humanitarian work, the topic of religious belief remains fraught and underdeveloped in human rights activism. Concerns include the conviction that religion must be treated as private in order to preserve an inclusive public life; evidence that religious communities may oppose the human rights' groups commitments on LGBTQI and women's rights; and anxieties that various religious groups will exclude or manipulate those who are not members and use their influence to proselytize. On the other hand, some faith communities interested in partnering with human rights activism struggle to express and maintain their own distinctive missions, resisting instrumentalization of their resources.

This session will focus on the challenges of promoting religious literacy among international organizations and among partners. What is 'religious literacy'? How is it related to a need for "secular literacy," i.e. an understanding of the complexity of secularisms and the assumptions that undergird them, the biases that they entail? To what extent can various faiths and secularisms "translate" their beliefs, and how will faith actors and human rights activists cooperate around those aspects that cannot be translated?

Rob Brodrick, one of the authors of the Harvard Religious Literacy Project's paper, "Local Humanitarian Leadership and Religious Literacy: Engaging with Religion, Faith, and Faith Actors," will provide an overview of the state of the question. Three responses will be offered, including representation from faith communities interested in collaboration on human rights, human rights activism working to include faith communities, and scholars examining questions of "translation" of faith traditions.

Convener: Kelly Johnson

Main Presenter: Rob Broderick, Ph.D.

Respondents: Anwar Khan (Islamic Relief, USA), Edith Tapia (Hope Border Institute), Leocadie Lushombo (Boston College)

Presenter information:

Rob Brodrick holds a Ph.D. from Boston College, having written a dissertation on the location and role of the Catholic Church within global power structures. Previously, he engaged in community development work in Dayton, OH and is a co-founder of the Mission of Mary Cooperative, a local non-profit organization dedicated to food access and sustainable livelihoods education. He holds an M.A. and B.S. from the University of Dayton.

Kelly Johnson holds a BA in Theology and MA in Liturgical Studies at the University of Notre Dame, and a PhD in Theological Ethics at Duke University. Her scholarship since has explored the relationship of grace to Christian social ethics, treating topics such as gendered notions of the virtue of charity, a spirituality of conflict, the role of joy in human rights activism, and critiques of “stewardship” as a model for financial and environmental ethics. Dr. Johnson is an associate professor in the Department of Religious Studies at the University of Dayton.