By Annemarie Fisher, Department of Education

Advised by Dr. Jackie Arnold

Common Core Literature

- Began in 2009; adopted by 43 states
- Goals: unite country in instruction, college and career readiness, common assessment tool
- Professional development
- Concerns about research basis

Catholic Education Literature

- Private schools not dictated by states
- BUT many dioceses have adopted standards
- NCEA issued statement in support
- Creation of Common Core Catholic Identity Initiative
- Opposition: Letter from professors to USCCB

Methodology and Research

- Research Question: What factors lead to the adaptation of the CCSS for Catholic schools, and how do Catholic schools implement their academic?
- Interviews with teachers, principals, and superintendents of two archdioceses (one using CCSS, one using another set of standards)

Results and Discussion

- Similar development of standards in both archdioceses
- Similar implementations of standards (professional development, textbooks, response to opposition)
- Catholic identity most evident in writing of standards
