Is It Worth It?
Experiences and Demands of Non-Scholarship Student-Athletes at a Division I Institution

ABSTRACT

Student-athletes are some of the most stigmatized individuals at Division I institutions. A great deal of research focuses on the challenges and opportunities of scholarship student-athletes, but a look into the lives of non-scholarship student-athletes is not present in current literature. Through qualitative, semi-structured interviews with student-athletes who do not receive an athletic scholarship, a greater picture of the non-scholarship Division I student-athlete experience was gained. These student-athletes face greater pressure as financial aid is largely tied to maintaining higher grades and the demands of athletic participation are very high. Findings showed that though students feel supported, the rigorous demands of being a full-time student and athlete can be an inhibitor to full engagement on campus. Implications and recommendations of this study provide the need for more research on this sub-population and ideas of collaboration to allow for full involvement of these student-athletes at their institution.

METHODS

- Participants referred by Academic Coordinators
- Demographic questionnaire
- Semi-structured 1:1 interviews were recorded, transcribed, and coded into themes
- Questions about engagement and experience

FUTURE RESEARCH

- More participants from all sports
- Multi-campus component
  - Assess services
  - Different size/type
- Interview faculty and staff around support
- Focus groups to compare experiences
- Specialized training

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Special thanks to my participants, professors, family, staffs, and friends for their unwavering support throughout this semester. I would especially like to thank the OASSA Office for helping me to realize my passion working with student-athletes. Last but not least, I would like to thank Trent Pinto for believing in me ten years ago. Clear Eyes, Full Hearts, Can't Lose.
