Introducing the University of Dayton Law Review Online

Spring 2023

There are few moments as satisfying as seeing a long-term project to fruition. This rings particularly true in the world of law journals, in which change comes glacially, if at all. But as in the study of the law itself, any headway worth making requires determination, patience, and enthusiasm.

The Editorial Board of Volume 48 has the pleasure of announcing the inaugural edition of the University of Dayton Law Review Online. A supplement to the print edition, the Law Review Online will publish short and timely articles which respond to the ever-changing legal landscape, both in our own community in Dayton, Ohio, and around the country. We believe that the Law Review Online will become a hub for legal professionals to share their insights on developments in the law in a way which is more accessible and reactive than our ordinary print journal. This is an increasingly important characteristic for a legal publication to have, particularly in this age of sweeping change and uncertainty.

Anyone with a stable internet connection can create a blog. It is much harder to lay a foundation for a robust online legal journal which will survive editorial board transitions and flourish in its own right. I would like to thank each member of Volume 48 for their efforts in ensuring that the Law Review Online has the support it needs to grow in this way. In this same spirit, I would like to thank the incoming Editorial Board of Volume 49 for embracing this new challenge and for their commitment to its enduring success.

Cordially,

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read "John P. Jarecki", with a long horizontal flourish extending to the right.

John P. Jarecki
Editor-in-Chief
