DAYTON, Ohio, September 29, 1966 --- The University of Dayton Food Services, in competition with bakeries, hotels, motels and other commercial food establishments, won first prize Thursday in the Culinary Arts Exhibit at the annual Convention of the Mid-American Restaurant Association. The three-day, Tuesday through Thursday, affair was held in the Veterans Memorial Building, Columbus, and was attended by 20,000.

The UD exhibit, prepared by 24-year-old chef, Erwin Kohler, included a display of specially prepared and decorated Alaskan King Crab, two turkeys, chaudfroid ham, salmon and a watermelon shaped in the form of a basket with handle. The fish and meats were cut in special forms and the decorations included truffles, fruits and flowers.

Dr. Ashley Montagu, internationally-known anthropologist, will deliver a lecture with the intriguing title, "An Anthropologist Looks at Love", in the Ballroom of the University of Dayton's John F. Kennedy Memorial Union, Monday, October 10, at 8 p.m. The talk is sponsored by the University's Department of Sociology and Anthropology. The public is invited.

Born in London, England, Dr. Montagu became an American citizen in 1940. He was educated at the University of London, University of Florence and Columbia University. A noted writer in his field since 1937, Dr. Montagu has served at the British Museum of Natural History, the Wellcome Historical Medical Museum in London, England; New York University, Philadelphia's Hahnemann Medical College and Hospital, and Rutgers University.

He also served with a UNESCO Committee of Experts of geneticists and anthropologists and has been senior lecturer since 1946 with the Veterans' Administration Post-Graduate Training Program.

Rev. Dr. Adrian L. van Kamm, professor of psychology at Duquesne University, will be the first guest lecturer for the "Religion and Psychology" course being offered this semester. The lecture will be given Tuesday, October 4, in Sherman Hall, Room 217, at 7 P.M. The public is invited.

Dr. van Kamm's appearance is part of an experiment in interdisciplinary instruction which has been initiated by the University's Department of Psychology. UD professors from the departments of Philosophy, Theology, and Education are serving as guest lecturers also. Other outside speakers of Dr. van Kamm's stature will lecture.

Dr. Vann Kamm will address the class on "Religion and Personality," taken from his recent book by the same name.
