The elimination of late registration and the addition of registration by mail are a part of the Fall registration program for students at the University of Dayton.

Mrs. Irene Criggall, supervisor of registration, said today that about 5,200 upperclassmen (sophomores, juniors and seniors) have been given the opportunity to register by mail during this month. Her office has sent them an information form, a registration blank, a copy of their fall schedule and their IBM class cards.

The upperclassmen can fill out these information forms and return them to the University by August 1. By doing this they will not have to come to the August 29, 30 and 31 registration in the fieldhouse. Classes begin Tuesday, September 6.

Freshmen, however, will have to register in the fieldhouse on September 1 and 2. "This is not an imposition for them," said Mrs. Craigall, "because they have to be here for orientation week on August 29.

"Registering by mail," continued Mrs. Criggall, "is a convenience for our upperclassmen since they do not have to remain around Dayton for an entire week waiting for classes to begin.

"This new plan is much more workable for our office since we do not have to process 7,200 students in a five-day period and then wait another week while we service students at late registration. With the advent of the tri-mester system, wherein we go to school continually during the year, we were not able to properly handle all the paper work at the beginning of the school year."
