Two Noted Guest Lecturers and a Tagalog Teacher to Come to the University of Dayton
DAYTON, Ohio, July 6, 1967 --- Two noted men in the fields of racial integration and the use of audio visual materials in television teaching will be guest lecturers in the federally-sponsored summer educational institutes at the University of Dayton next week. A third will teach Tagalog, a Filipino dialect, in the Spanish Institute.

Dr. Samuel Shepherd, assistant superintendent of St. Louis Public Schools, will lecture in UD's summer institute in the History of the Negro in the United States while Mr. Norman Grahl, audio visual coordinator for the Washington County Public Schools, Hagerstown, Maryland, will speak to members of the educational media institute. The former program is sponsored by the History Department while the latter project is under the direction of the Communication Arts Department.

Mr. Rafael Papa, a native of Manila in the Philippines who now teaches in Glastonbury, Connecticut, High School, will teach Tagalog to members of the Spanish Institute.

Dr. Shepherd was prominent during the integration of St. Louis schools which was done with little trouble. He is in charge of the Benjamin Banniker District project and is a great believer in the school's involvement in community affairs, particularly in disadvantaged areas.

Mr. Grahl is noted for his work in the field of audio visual materials and their use in the teaching by television. He lectures frequently on the subject throughout the country.
