DAYTON, Ohio, July 19, 1967 --- The University of Dayton will award seven tuition grants-in-aid to six policemen and one policewoman in its Police Administration program, Bro. Norbert Brockman, Chairman of the Political Science Department and Police Administration Program announced today. First scholarships, going to five members of the Dayton Police Department and one each to the Centerville Police Department and the Montgomery County Sheriff's Office, will be awarded for the 1967-68 school year.

Those receiving grants in September are Dayton patrolmen James Casey, Bobby Joe Cox, Keith Haley, and James Newby, who are in the two-year associate degree program, and Dayton Lieutenant Richard Stamm, Donald Ruhlman of Centerville police, and Geraldine Fraley, women's matron at the Montgomery County Jail. The last three named are in the four year program. Ruhlman has an associate degree in police administration from the University of Cincinnati.

The program, begun in January of last year, will graduate its first two students on July 30. Lt. Stamm, who is a recipient of the aforementioned grant, will receive an associate degree in police administration and Philip O'Sullivan of Rochester, N.Y., not affiliated with a police agency, is receiving his bachelor's degree in social science with specialization in police administration.

The Police Administration program is designed to offer a two-year associate degree in police administration and a four-year bachelor of social science degree with specialization in police administration.

In order to receive one of the grants-in-aid, Bro. Brockman says a student must be a fulltime employee of a law enforcement agency and must maintain at least a 3.0 academic average in police administration. Forty-five will be enrolled in the program this September.
