DAYTON, Ohio January 31, 1968 --- Two Society of Mary members who are professors at the University of Dayton have moved into a student, off-campus house with two freshmen students, Mike Lisbeth of Springfield, Virginia, and Tim Tynham of Columbus, Ohio. The house is at 214 Kiefaber street two blocks from the main campus of the University of Dayton.

The experimenters are Bro. Edward Krall, Computer Science, and Bro. Leo Murray, Theological Studies. They commenced the 15-week experiment recently in community living of student and teacher with emphasis upon openness and unity such an informal arrangement provides.

Basically it is also an experiment in providing a milieu for better decision and formation of young men considering the vocation in the Society of Mary while continuing their college education in circumstances contributing to a more personal and deeper maturity than former systems of training offered.

Bro. Murray, in discussing the group's initial reaction, says: "Bro. Krall has emerged from the experiment as a cook of note. The enthusiasm of the entire group has managed the housekeeping and preparation of the house without interference to University duties and time."

Both Brothers remain members of the West Campus Community canonically. They have been granted quasi 'leave of absence' for this recruitment assignment as part of that Community's concern about this problem. The experiment has been labeled Mariannist Student House §3 because such houses exist in Cincinnati and Cleveland for students on the secondary level who live in them for much shorter periods of time.

Evaluation of the UD project will be made at the end of the present term in late April.
