DAYTON, Ohio, February 26, 1968 --- Professor Saul S. Friedman of Otterbein College opens the 1968 University of Dayton Intellectual Frontiers Series this Thursday with a discussion of "Riots, Violence and Civil Rights" in the Wohlleben Hall Auditorium at 8 p.m. Mr. Friedman, who teaches history at Otterbein, was a member of the Community Action for Youth program in the Hough district of Cleveland during the civil disturbances there a couple years ago.

Besides his lectures, Professor Friedman, who received his bachelor's degree from Kent State and master's from Ohio State University, has written several articles on civil rights and related problems for the National Review. His "Riots, Violence and Civil Rights" talk will be taken from a 1967 article he did for the Review. He also has written about the background of the Middle East crisis for publication.

Mr. Friedman, who has done doctoral work at Harvard Law School and Ohio State, has taught at Cuyahoga County Community College, College of St. Mary's of the Springs and the Temple Israel Institute, and served with the Franklin County Welfare Department.

The 1968 Intellectual Frontiers Series consists of five lectures through March 28.
