DAYTON, Ohio, February 23, 1970 --- Her Excellency Angie Brooks, President of the United Nations General Assembly, will speak at the University of Dayton Monday, March 2, as part of the Union Activities Organization program entitled "Society's Daughter, the Restless Woman of the Seventies." Co-sponsored by the Dayton Council on World Affairs, the Political Science Department at UD, C.W.O. and the Greater Dayton Alumni Chapter, Miss Brooks will speak at 8:00 p.m. in the Kennedy Union Ballroom.

Since 1954, Miss Brooks has served as a delegate from Liberia to the UN. She has served on numerous committees and was the first woman ever to be President of the United Nations Trusteeship Council, winning wide acclaim for her handling of the often unruly committee. She has been Liberia's Assistant Secretary of State since 1958 and has also served as her country's Vice President. Miss Brooks has served as President of the International Federation of Women Lawyers for three years.

Born in Virginia, Liberia, in 1928, Miss Brooks is known for her well developed sense of humor and disposition. While still a teenager in Liberia, her pastor helped her to go to school in the United States. She received a BA degree from Shaw University in North Carolina and a law degree from the University of Wisconsin. She continued her studies at London University and received an LLD from Howard University in Washington, D.C., and a DCL from Liberia University. Miss Brooks has received numerous awards from religious and civic organizations for achievements in the field of human relations. She has also been decorated by eleven governments, including Liberia.
