DAYTON, Ohio, April 16, 1969 --- Dr. Frederick J. Bueche, a Professor of Physics at the University of Dayton since 1961, received the 10th annual Professor of the Year Award at that University last night. The Award, sponsored by UD's National Alumni Association since 1960, was presented at the annual President's Recognition Dinner in the Ballroom of the Kennedy Union. More than 300 attended the affair.

The alumni award was established in 1960 to honor faculty members who make "out-standing contributions to the academic life and prestige of the University of Dayton." Taken into consideration are the professor's scholarly pursuits which apply not only to the established responsibilities but those over and above his normal scholarly efforts. A committee of faculty members, selected from the Faculty Forum, make the selections. The award winner receives $500 from the alumni association.

Finishing second was F. Anthony Macklin, Assistant Professor of English. Professor Macklin, who has been with the University since 1962, received $300. Dr. Gad Soffer, a native of Israel who came to UD in 1966, was the third place winner and received $200. He is an Assistant Professor of History.

The annual banquet honored not only the Professor of the Year winners but jubilarians (those who have completed 25 years of service to UD), faculty promotions and appointments, retirees, and those who have received special recognition through research grants, executive status, or appointments to national organizations and publications.

Dr. Bueche has his degrees from the University of Michigan and Cornell University while Professor Macklin has two degrees from Villanova University. Dr. Soffer received his degrees from Georgetown University and the American University in Washington, D.C.

The list of guests under honored categories follows:

PROFESSOR OF THE YEAR AWARD
(National Alumni Association)

First Place

FREDERICK J. BUECHE

As a teacher he is acknowledged by his peers and students alike as truly out-standing. His ability to engage a class actively in the teaching process has to be seen to be believed. As a strong follow-up to the classroom he spends untold hours in working with individual students.

He has developed a research facility in which students, both graduate and undergraduate, can easily participate. The fact that he has done meaningful research in limited space and with a limited budget, has served as a real model and has set the overall research tone for his entire department.

The past year's scholarly activity shows three research papers, a translation into Spanish of his highly regarded text, "Principles of Physics," and the publication of an 899 page text, "Introduction to Physics for Scientists and Engineer," by McGraw-Hill.

For his leadership in teaching and research, and his inspiration to faculty and students alike, the Alumni Award for 1969 goes to Frederick J. Bueche, Professor of Physics.

Second Place

F. ANTHONY MACKLIN

As a teacher who does not accept the usual limits of an academic discipline, he has taught successful courses in three separate departments.

As an author he has contributed to: "Persistence of Vision" - a collection of essays published by the University of Wisconsin Press; a short story in The North American Review, reviews articles in America and Commonweal as well as in Film Heritage which he serves as editor and publisher. He is currently contributing film reviews to the Dayton Journal Herald. He has also had articles accepted for publication by the Saturday Review of Literature and by December Magazine.

For meeting the university world on his own terms in gaining recognition for the film as an acceptable academic study, for teaching on a multidisciplinary level, and for successful publication of a number of articles, the Alumni Award, 2nd Place, goes to F. Anthony Macklin, Assistant Professor of English.

Third Place

GAD SOFFER

In the highest tradition of the teacher-scholar, he brings to the classroom the excitement of personal involvement in the field. By participation in University-wide meetings and debates he has contributed a feeling of concern and competence in his field of current middle eastern History.

As a lecturer and panel participant for local groups such as the Dayton Council on World Affairs, the faculty and students of Kettering College of Medical Arts and Dayton television channels, he has contributed his expert knowledge to the Dayton Community.

His scholarly activity during the past year includes presentation of papers before the Middle East Studies Association of North America, and the American Historical Association, as well as an article in the University of Dayton Review.

Acceptance of his work by his academic peers is evidenced by his being asked to organize a panel on "Military and Society in the Middle East: An Historical Evaluation," at the annual Meeting of the American Historical Association in December 1968. His paper presented at that meeting was requested by the United States, Department of State, Foreign Affairs Research Documentation Center. It will be used to provide recent information in social sciences related to the Middle East.

For contribution to the academic life and prestige of the University of Dayton on the local, national and international levels, the Alumni Award 3rd Place, goes to Dr. Gad Soffer, Assistant Professor of History.

EXCELLENCE AS TEACHERS

(This is a new category introduced as an effort to recognize strong teaching in the classroom. Those selected from the six academic areas are, according to Rev. Charles Lees, Provost, "Typical representatives of superior teaching." The Deans of each academic school or college made the final selections after extensive consultations and recommendations from departmental chairmen.)
