DAYTON, Ohio, April 14, 1971 --- "Stash The Trash" this Saturday, April 17, is the University of Dayton students' idea of Spring Cleanup. Project South, that group which was born out of trouble last Fall, is taking another positive step in helping the community just south of the main campus which is a mixture of UD students and local residents.

This is the last week of classes at UD and the students--most of them--will go home after examinations next week. The student members of Project South wanted to be sure that the neighborhood bounded by the main campus, Brown Street and Irving Avenue was left in an orderly, clean fashion.

They're getting plenty of help. The City of Dayton will supply trash trucks and drivers. The University of Dayton will supply the work tools and one truck and the Rubicon Association, Ohio Public Interest Action Group and Peace, Power and People will supply the manpower.

Mike Sims, a December UD graduate who has been working with Project South, says that the cleanup will start at Lawnview and Stonemill streets at 9 a.m. and proceed until finished. Students are urging residents to put their old trash out at the curb for quick pickup.
