DAYTON, Ohio, April 19, 1971 — "Psychology of Worker Behavior is the title of a course currently being offered by the University of Dayton for women in supervision.

Started April 13, the course is a part of a program by UD's Special Sessions Department to explore women as management material. It runs eight weeks.

The contents of the course includes: The Dynamics of Human Behavior; Why People Work; Attitude, Morale and Worker Behavior; Emotions and the Job; Handling Frustrations; Normal-Abnormal Behavior; On Self Development; and, The Successful Supervisor.

This course is the first of six core courses to be offered in the University's Management Development Program for Women. This integrated series of courses is designed for women who presently function--or desire to prepare for work as--supervisors or middle managers. The core courses are designed so that they need not be taken in sequence; optional courses of relevancy will also be available at different times during the year.

This Management Program is open to all women with high school or equivalent education. Employment experience is desirable, but not essential. The courses are not designed for advanced levels of management. The core courses are entitled as follows: (1) Psychology of Worker Behavior; (2) Organizational Concepts & the Supervisor; (3) Practical Problems in Supervision; (4) The Women in Personnel Supervision; (5) Workshop in Business Interviewing and Counseling; and (6) Workshop in Personal Development Skills.
