DAYTON, Ohio, February 10, 1972  ---  Mr. James Adamitis, Director of the University of Dayton's Criminal Justice Department recently submitted to the state of Wisconsin, a model of U.D.'s operations in this field of study, and offered them suggestions on means they might employ in establishing such a system. This was accomplished at the request of Dr. Jerald Levine, the Recording Secretary for the Educational Policies Subcommittee representing the Wisconsin Council on Criminal Justice.

Mr. Adamitis was informed by Dr. Levine that Wisconsin wants to improve its educational programs, and would like to establish a four year Criminal Justice program within the state school system. Dr. Levine is responsible for submitting a final appraisal on what he calls an "optimum Criminal Justice program." In accordance with this, he is contacting select people and institutions about their own operations, and asking them to assist in an advisory capacity in setting up a similar system.

The University of Dayton's own Criminal Justice was recently revised under the direction of Mr. Adamitis. Under the new system, both freshmen and graduates from accredited community colleges are admitted to the department as candidates for a degree.
