UD HOSTS DAYTON LEADERSHIP WORKSHOP

DAYTON, Ohio, May 17, 1982 -- The University of Dayton in cooperation with Wright State University and Sinclair Community College will host a Dayton Leadership Workshop on May 19, 1982. The workshop, for high school students, is sponsored by the universities Military Science Departments.

The one day workshop is designed to help the students to become capable leaders. They will participate in sessions on character development, group dynamics and the theory and concepts of leadership. The participants will also learn "how to organize and conduct a meeting."

Captain Ray Barrett, assistant professor of military science at the University of Dayton and Sinclair Community College, coordinated the project. He believes that the "Dayton Leadership Workshop will help the students learn to work together and to give them the basic knowledge to become effective leaders." In addition, the project will assist these "future community leaders" with their personal growth and development.

Representatives from 20 area high schools will attend the workshops from 8 a.m. until 3:30 p.m. in UD's Kennedy Union 211, 312, and 313. The workshop participants are elected student government representatives who have been chosen by their schools for this project.

The University of Dayton, Wright State University, and Sinclair Community College have joint Military Science Departments and work cooperatively on education and community projects. For more information, contact Major Randy Tucker at 229-3326.
