UD FACULTY DAY TO HIGHLIGHT VALUES EDUCATION, AUTHORS, AND COMPUTERS

DAYTON, Ohio, February 17, 1983 -- Richard L. Morrill, president of Centre College in Danville, Kentucky, will address members of the University of Dayton faculty as part of Faculty Development Day on Tuesday, February 22.

Morrill, author of the book Teaching Values in College, will speak at 10:30 a.m. in Boll Theatre on "Teaching Values in Higher Education." Morrill holds degrees from Brown, Yale, and Duke universities. He has served as assistant professor of religion at Wells College in Aurora, New York; associate provost at Chatham College in Pittsburgh; executive assistant to the provost at Pennsylvania State University; and president of Salem Academy and College in Winston-Salem, North Carolina.

The faculty program will begin at 8:30 a.m. with departmental meetings as determined by the college or school. At noon, a buffet luncheon in the Kennedy Union Ballroom will feature the recognition of journal articles and conference papers published by the faculty during 1981 and 1982, and also a display of many of these articles.

Lunch will be followed by various meetings. The College of Arts and Sciences, in cooperation with the Office of Computing Activities, will offer a program on the use of the University computer for faculty members who are unfamiliar with its capabilities and operation.
