DAYTON, Ohio, October 20, 1987--The University of Dayton's Department of Philosophy will present its 16th annual philosophy colloquium on Friday, November 6, and Saturday, November 7. The colloquium, "Aristotle's Ethics and Metaphysics," will consist of presentations throughout both days in UD's Kennedy Union 311 and 331.

Visiting guest speakers, Alan Code and Julia Annas, will highlight the program with special evening presentations. Code, who is from the University of California at Berkeley, will speak at 8 p.m. Friday on "The Philosophical Significance of the Middle Books of the 'Metaphysics.'" Annas, who is from the University of Arizona, will speak at 8:30 p.m. Saturday on "Virtue and Happiness in Aristotle." Both of these talks will be in Kennedy Union 331.

The mornings and afternoons of the colloquium will be filled with presentations by 14 scholars from various colleges and universities. The first presentations begin at 10 a.m. both mornings, and each talk will be followed by commentary from other scholars.

The colloquium will conclude with a social in Kennedy Union 152 following the Saturday evening presentation. There is no cost to attend any of the events, and no registration is required. For more information on specific speakers and times contact Jane Zembaty at 229-2813 or Raymond Herbenick at 229-2923.
