DAYTON, Ohio, Nov. 3, 1989--Richard Keeling, president of the American College Health Association and a nationally known expert on Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS), will speak on AIDS at the University of Dayton's Kennedy Union Ballroom on Thursday, Nov. 16 at 8 p.m. The presentation is part of UD's 11-day AIDS Information Days Series and is open to the public.

Keeling is currently an associate professor and director of the department of student health at the University of Virginia. He is chairman of the American College Association's AIDS task force and serves on its board of directors. Keeling also served as a member of the United States Public Health Service's ad hoc advisory committee on AIDS and the National AIDS Network board of directors.

The presentation is also part of UD's Greek 101 course that is required for all fraternity and sorority pledges. "Keeling is a dynamic speaker," said Melissa Timson, coordinator of Greek life. "He incorporates statistics and facts and keeps on a level that applies to his audience. With this general topic, we are hoping to increase an awareness among the community on AIDS."

For more information, call UD's office of student development at (513) 229-2638.
