DAYTON, Ohio, November 2, 1977 --- Ninety-three percent of the University of Dayton Law School's first graduating class passed the Ohio Bar exam, according to Richard L. Braun, Dean of the Law School.

The results of the July exam were released over the weekend.

The state-wide average of persons taking the Bar for the first time was 91.7%.

"This result for our first class is indeed gratifying," said Dean Braun. "Our students performed better than those of some long-established Ohio law schools and they exceeded the state-wide average," he said.

University of Dayton Law School graduates are now employed in a variety of legal positions, including private practice, government positions, and corporate jobs. "They are becoming a part of the legal community throughout Ohio and surrounding states," Dean Braun said. "I think we can say in a very real sense that we have arrived."
