DAYTON, Ohio, November 13, 1981 -- The University of Dayton Center for Afro-American Affairs will sponsor its Third Annual Career Workshop on Saturday, November 21, at The Daytonian, Ludlow and Third Streets in Dayton. The theme of this year's workshop is the development of strategies for economic survival. The workshop topic is "Broadening Career Potentials in a Changing Job Market."

The workshop will begin at 10 a.m. with a keynote speaker, Dr. Marcus Alexis. Alexis, an economist, is currently on the faculty of Northwestern University and was previously with the Carter Administration. He has many publications, including "Purchasing Profiles of Black Americans."

There will be a noon luncheon and fashion show featuring "How to Dress for Success." A panel discussion will be held in the afternoon and a number of black professionals will discuss career opportunities, training, and occupational outlook for various professions.

Panel members are: Claude Patman, Center City Minority Enterprize Investment Company, Inc., Dayton, Ohio; Dr. Jan Coates, Optometrist, Dayton, Ohio; Bob Ross, Bob Ross Buick, Centerville, Ohio; Leonard Henderson, Attorney, Manager, Metropolitan Life Insurance Corporation, Dayton, Ohio; and Len Small, Ph.D., Product Development Manager, Procter and Gamble, Cincinnati, Ohio.

The charge for this workshop is $12, which includes the luncheon. Reservations should be made by Wednesday, November 18. Call James Stocks, Assistant Dean of Students: Minority Student Services, University of Dayton at 229-2426.
