APPOINTMENTS, AWARDS, PROMOTIONS AT THE UNIVERSITY OF DAYTON

DAYTON, Ohio — The following appointments, awards and promotions were recently received by University of Dayton faculty and staff members.

- Tim Bete was promoted to development communications manager at the University of Dayton's public relations office. He joined the UD staff in May 1998 as a development writer. He lives in Beavercreek.

- Richard Chenoweth, associate professor of music, received the 1999 Alumni Award for Scholarship. Chenoweth, co-founder of the Carillon Brass Quintet, performs on the horn more than 120 times a year in solo, chamber music or orchestra performances. Chenoweth lives in Centerville.

- Rebecca Cochran, associate professor of law and director of the legal professions program at UD's School of Law, received the 1999 Alumni Award for Teaching. Cochran is also the faculty adviser for UD's moot court. Her textbook, Judicial Externships: The Clinic Inside the Courthouse, is now in its second edition. She lives in Oakwood.

- Allan Crasto, senior research materials scientist in nonmetallic materials at UD's Research Institute, was recently named a Fellow of the Society for the Advancement of Material and Process Engineering (SAMPE). The society has a membership of 6,000 and only 71 scientists have been inducted as fellows. Crasto will be recognized at the International SAMPE Symposium and Exhibition in Long Beach, Calif., on May 26. He is a resident of Centerville.

- Helen Gross, assistant director of human resources for records, was a co-recipient of the 1999 Marianist Service Award. Gross joined the UD human resources staff as a secretary in 1977. She lives in Centerville.

- Kenneth Keck, assistant director of athletics, was a co-recipient of the 1999 Marianist Service Award. Keck joined UD's athletics staff in 1970 as an equipment manager. He lives in Dayton.

- Jeaneen Parsons has been promoted to the position of production manager at UD's public relations office. Parsons manages more than $450,000 in printing projects for the University's advancement and enrollment management divisions each year. Parsons lives in Dayton.

- Steve Smith, a research physicist in the metals and ceramics division of UD's Research Institute, received UDRI's top award, the 1998-99 Wohlleben-Hochwalt Award for outstanding research. He was recognized for his research in silicon carbide, a crystalline material used in high-power, high-temperature and high-frequency electronic applications. Smith lives in Dayton.
