UD INSTITUTE FOR LEARNING IN RETIREMENT
WINTER SESSION FEATURES HUMAN RIGHTS

DAYTON, Ohio — For the first time, the University of Dayton’s Institute for Learning in Retirement will offer a winter session for senior adults. The line-up will feature 11 discussion-based seminars, including an in-depth look at human rights around the world.

“The Universal Declaration of Human Rights: 50 Years Later” class, taught by Mark Ensalaco, associate professor of political science and director of the international studies program at UD, will discuss the governments and policies of modern countries using the United Nation’s Universal Declaration of Human Rights as a reference point.

The Institute offers many other classes designed to appeal to a wide range of interests. Participants in the class on the life and times of the legendary Wright brothers will have the opportunity to speak with area historians and biographers about the challenges and accomplishments of the Wrights during their lives in Dayton.

Music and art enthusiasts may choose the seminar on big bands that will include audio, video and live performances, and they may opt to take dulcimer lessons. A session on the literature of the Bloomsbury Group, focusing on the writings of E.M. Forster and Virginia Woolf, will also be offered.

The “Update on Senior Health Issues,” “Memory Improvement” and “Understanding Long Term Health Care” seminars are specifically designed to address the needs and concerns of senior adults. The seminars also include classes on the Dayton Police Department, teaching English as a second language and financial planning.

Tuition for the program is $45 and includes as many of the classes as students can fit into their schedule. The seminars meet mid-day once a week Jan. 11- March 8. Registration deadline is Jan. 6.

Call UD’s continuing education office at (937) 229-2347 for detailed course information and registration.
