About the Authors . . .

John Emling, S.M.

Brother John Emling, S.M., earned his doctorate in education at Western Reserve University. He also has a background of graduate study in business administration and economics. He is not just a theorist in education, having taught at Duquesne University and St. Mary's College, California, before coming to the University of Dayton.

Ellis A. Joseph

Ellis A. Joseph, Associate Professor of Education, is chairman of the Department of Secondary Education. Holding his degree from the University of Notre Dame, Doctor Joseph has written extensively in the fields of philosophy and education and has been in great demand as a speaker.

John Lauff

John Lauff, a member of the Department of Philosophy, holds his S.T.B. from St. Mary's, Baltimore, and his M.A. from St. John's University in Brooklyn. He has contributed to The University of Dayton Review and to Mary Today. At present Mr. Lauff is on leave of absence to serve as a Papal Volunteer of Latin America.

Mary Jo Huth

Mary Jo Huth, who holds her doctoral degree from St. Louis University, is chairman of the Department of Sociology. She has been honored by several Honor Societies and has taught at colleges throughout the country. Widely traveled at home and abroad, she has contributed to various journals and reviews.

John A. Elbert, S.M.

Very Reverend John A. Elbert, S.M., former Provincial Superior of the Cincinnati Province of the Society of Mary, was President of the University of Dayton from 1938 until 1944. He is the author of half a dozen books and numerous articles. This is not his first contribution to this review.
