

X School of Law*

Richard L. Braun, Dean
Thomas C. Fischer, Associate Dean

The plan and design of the law program is predicated on a careful consideration of what law demands of those who choose it as a profession: a high level of competence in the knowledge, theory, and practice of law. In order that the student may achieve such competence, the University of Dayton School of Law regards as its primary responsibility the maintenance of a program of studies that is both thorough and exacting.

The program recognizes that the lawyer must fulfill several roles: counselor, advocate, member of a profession, and public servant. As a counselor, the lawyer must be prepared for the reality that legal matters are often interrelated with other factors, sometimes very personal ones, in an attorney-client relationship. As an effective advocate, the lawyer must be capable of securing for the client the rights and privileges the law accords. As a member of a profession, the lawyer has a responsibility to earn the respect and confidence of the public essential to a sound legal and judicial system. As a public servant, the lawyer must realize that the very nature of his training and profession imposes the duty of leadership and service.

Accordingly, the Law School does not stint in its treatment of the substance and procedure of the law, legal institutions, and jurisprudence. The faculty view the substance of the law as involving not only what the law is but also its theory, philosophy, and development. Some courses focus directly on the dimensions of social justice and the underlying values of the legal method and system. Other courses treat thoroughly practice and application. Still others provide for specialized development. Necessary compartmentalizing of courses, however, need not nor does it here result in overlooking the necessity of their integration. The Law School likewise recognizes that not all learning takes place in the classroom. Frequent association with members of the profession and the judiciary, exposure to actual practice, and participation in professional events are important parts of learning law.

In summary, legal education at the University of Dayton is based on the belief that the lawyer must be able to offer his clients and the public the combination of competence in legal knowledge and skill, sensitivity to personal values and behavior, and awareness of moral and ethical responsibility that befit the profession.

This test is administered periodically by the Educational Testing Services (20 Nassau St., Princeton, N.J. 08540) in a number of testing centers throughout the country, one of which is the University of Dayton. It is advisable to take the test at the earliest possible time. For current testing dates contact the dean's office of the School of Law. Law School Admission Test results should be sent directly to the University of Dayton School of Law as a part of the LSDAS report by the Educational Testing Service. In requesting LSAT scores, indicate the University of Dayton reporting number, R1834.

THE JURIS DOCTOR PROGRAM

Eligibility for the degree of Juris Doctor requires the following:

1. Satisfactory completion of all required courses and sufficient electives for a minimum total of 84 semester hours of credit.
2. Attainment of at least a 2.0 point average for all courses taken.
3. Resident requirements as prescribed by the American Bar Association's standards for legal education.
4. Evidence of sound moral character.

The Juris Doctor program is such that the first year and much of the second year are largely prescribed. The first year consists entirely of required courses; the second year provides some opportunity for electives. The third year, however, provides great latitude for electives. The program is designed to insure that the student has covered all areas of study essential in the practice of law and yet to provide ample latitude for courses in particular areas of interest. The student is permitted to elect up to six semester hours of courses in other graduate departments and programs when such interdisciplinary work is suitably related to the individual program of law studies. (These courses must be approved by the Law School.)

Registration

Registration for courses must be completed before the beginning of each term. Deadlines are listed in the calendar in this chapter. It is the policy of the Law School that all first-year students in the day program be enrolled in and examined in all 32 semester hours of first-year work.

Bar Regulations

Students are responsible for acquainting themselves with the regulations for admission to the bar in the states in which they intend to practice. A number of states (e.g., Ohio) require bar registration at the time the student begins the study of law.

Academic Standards

Regular attendance at all classes is required. A faculty member may, at his discretion, disqualify a student from taking his final examination for failure to attend classes regularly.

In recording the quality of academic work, the Law School uses a system of letter grades, granting a specific number of quality points for each semester hour of a course in which a given grade is earned. The grades, with their equivalents in parentheses, are as follows: A+ (4.3); A (4.0); A- (3.7); B+ (3.3); B (3.0); B- (2.7); C+ (2.3); C (2.0); C- (1.7); D+ (1.3); D (1.0); F (0); I (incomplete); W (withdrawal); K (credit from other institutions or University departments).

Academic averages are computed by dividing the total of the earned quality points by the number of semester hours taken. If a course is failed and repeated, the hours and quality points each time are included in the computation of the average.

An over-all grade point average of 2.0 is required for graduation. Students must maintain a specified grade point average upon completion of each school year in order to remain in good standing. The standards are detailed in the School of Law's Policy Manual, with which students are required to become familiar.

If a student withdraws from a course with the permission of the instructor and the dean, that course will not count as work taken in the computation of the average. If a student withdraws without such permission, a failing grade is recorded and is counted in the determination of the average.

Evening Part-Time Program

The part-time program is a complete one in all respects. It maintains the same standards and quality as the full-time program. Designed to accommodate those who must maintain full-time or nearly full-time employment, it normally extends over a period of four years. It should be pointed out to prospective candidates that while the schedule is part-time, it is still a heavy load and requires extensive commitment.
